The semi-monthly Saturday night awards at the Sippel store sponsored by K. Sippel and Son and Cooper & Hostert will be somewhat enlivened Saturday night with a bean guessing contest. A surprise is in store for the next award night two week's hence.

Lenox 4-H club were at the city of Illinois Monday competing in state live stock judging contests as part of the 4-H club program. Four teams, two each in the dairy and livestock divisions, who were chosen in recent local contests, were at the contest.

On the Livestock team were: Frankfort-New Lenox club, Chester Ebert, Howard Strassenberg and Harry Yunker with Marvin Cappel as alternate.

The amateurs are all clamoring for your votes as prizes will be given to the one having most votes. Be sure to see it as it is free and you will be agreeably surprised at what can be done by a group who never handled Oil painting before.

Plans were then discussed for our county picnic on August 10th. Patricia Dowling and Mildred Kampe also gave a demonstration on "How to make drop cookies," a our county day show.

Several talks were given during the evening: Laura Wille explained "How sewing helps twins." Dorothy Wille showed us "How to place a pattern," and Helen Feigel told "How to press different materials."

After adjournment a very lovely lunch was served by our hostesses.

Our next meeting is at the home of Wilma Meyer on August 12th.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—There are many occasions on record where several important issues have engaged the attention of congress and frequently one of these issues has aroused such bitterness and developed such a controversy that it overshadowed all others. That has been the case in recent weeks during which President Roosevelt's plan to add six justices of his own choosing to the Supreme court of the United States completely subordinated everything else.

But the crushing defeat received by the President through refusal of the vast majority of Democrats in congress to support his court reorganization scheme suddenly has directed attention to other major questions. Outstanding among these is Secretary Wallace's farm bill and the so-called wages and hours bill which is claimed to contain complete protection for the laboring classes. It is of the farm bill that I shall write now since it is much more imminent as far as congressional action is concerned than is the case with the wages and hours proposition.

The basis of Secretary Wallace's program is what he calls the "ever-normal granary." There are other provisions included in the bill but the idea of a maintained supply of farm products is the heart of the plan.

Now, it seems that if the words "ever-normal granary" mean anything, they must be accepted as meaning a continuity of supply at a level which government agents arbitrarily determine as the proper rate of accumulation or sale of such supplies.

The house of representatives has been muddling along with the question for several months. It has been under much pressure from Secretary Wallace and his associates and from some of the farm leaders whom the secretary has convinced of the value of his scheme. The farm leaders as a whole are far from unanimous on the proposition despite the fact that Secretary Wallace and the tremendous propaganda machine within the Department of Agriculture has been exceedingly active in an effort to "sell" the plan to the country as a whole and thereby bring additional pressure on congress.

I shall not attempt to give all of the details of the Wallace proposal here. It is too complicated for explanation in the limited space available. Indeed, I have found quite a number of members of the house of representatives who are unable to give a complete explanation of how the plan would work—and they admit it. It is a piece of legislation that must be complicated in order to accomplish things its proponents claim for it and my observation of government agencies leads me to the conclusion it is so complicated that the chances of its succeeding are almost nil.

In the first instance, as I have said, the ever-normal granary idea comprehends a constant level of supplies. At first blush, it would seem that storage of wheat or corn or cotton or other farm products in a big crop year to be sold in years when crops are small should work out to keep prices at a satisfactory level. That is the theory. On the other hand, in times past this same sort of scheme has worked out to depress prices instead of maintaining them and the farmers have been the losers.

Included in this legislation are provisions for benefit payments to farmers under certain conditions when the price level falls below parity. This injects into the problem again the influence of the general price level of all commodities in the United States whether from the farm or from the factory and it also forces upon the United States additional influence wielded by the level of prices in foreign countries where the law of supply and demand continues to operate without impossible amendment at government's dictation.

No doubt, the Wallace proposal would boost prices at present. This is true because we have had several short crop years and there is no surplus now. But with indications that the current wheat crop, for example, is going to be exceptionally large, it is entirely possible that the nation as a whole will have a surplus of wheat this fall. In addition, there will be wheat crops grown in other countries as usual. Some of our wheat must be sold in foreign markets and compete with wheat grown in Russia or in South America. It is easy to see, therefore, that the lack of a wheat surplus in this country is exceedingly temporary.

The ever-normal granary, if it works as the theorists claim, would store or keep off of the market that portion of the crop which is not needed for current consumption. That sounds fine. Great users of wheat must buy their supplies far ahead.

If they do not take this precaution, they stand a chance always of finding their bins empty and are faced with the necessity of closing their mills. It is this feature that causes long range buyers to resort to what is called hedging. That is, they sell on option nearly as much as they buy on contract. They are thus able to offset losses whether the price of wheat goes up or whether it goes down and the losses or the gains are distributed throughout the industry. It is the only way by which the industry can protect itself.

Mr. Wallace's scheme proposes doing away with that sort of thing, not directly but through the effect of the ever-normal granary. In other words, the net result of the ever-normal granary would be for the government to hold these stocks and feed them into the market as demand for supplies requires. This sounds feasible and it probably would be except for the fact that we have no means of controlling production in the other wheat producing countries, and I repeat that I am using wheat as illustrative of all farm products. In fact, the Wallace plan provides no control of production in this country and that question is vital. As far as I can see, nature is going to operate to give us rain or give us drouth in accordance with the judgment of the Higher Power. No human is going to be very influential in that regard.

To get back to the question of the price level, it should be said that while the Wallace plan provides what appears to be an insurance against fluctuation, it is more likely to have the opposite effect. Because of the influence of world prices, great storehouses of wheat in the country will hang over the market like an epidemic. No one can tell when it will strike and since markets are made up of individuals who are human, a portion of the markets is always going to be frightened by the uncertainty of when government wheat will be offered for sale. It is a perfectly human reaction because it involves the pocketbooks and humans naturally want to buy as cheaply as they can and sell as high as they can.

One of the things that happened in the administration of President Hoover that is sure to be remembered is the utter failure of his farm policy. That farm policy centered at one time in what was called the Federal Farm board. If you will go back a few years and recall the operations of the Federal Farm board, I think you will agree that the things it undertook to do were exactly comparable to, if not exactly the same as, the scheme set up by Secretary Wallace in his ever-normal granary idea. The only difference that I can see—and I watched the operations of the farm board from close at hand—is a change in the name. It must be admitted that the phrase ever-normal granary has a pretty sound. But when it comes to a question of an attractive expression, one that is soothing and one that should convince us all that every problem is solved, I submit those favorites which Mr. Wallace used to use when Professor Tugwell was with him in the Department of Agriculture. Who does not recall the "more abundant life," and who has forgotten the "doctrine of scarcity to assure plenty?"

As far as I know, neither the house nor the senate committee on agriculture has held hearings on this ever-normal granary phase of the Wallace legislation. Thus far, the discussion has been largely on questions involving benefits and subsidies and means of marketing. No attention has been given to the ever-normal granary threat, and I regard it as a menace.

If this discussion were devoted to only the consumer phase of our economic life, I think I should be selfish enough to urge enactment of the Wallace plan. I believe I can see where the ever-normal granary idea will make bread cheaper, where it will make cotton textile goods cheaper and when cotton is cheaper other textiles are cheaper, and where other food and necessities of life that have their origin on the farm will be reduced in price by such a legislative policy. But that is not my idea of a sound economic structure. It is just as necessary for the consumer to pay his fair share toward the maintenance of a living agriculture as it is for farmers to pay their fair share to a living commerce and industry of whatever kind it may be.

The senate Democrats have elected a new leader to succeed the late Senator Joe Robinson, of Arkansas. He is Senator Alban Barkley, of Kentucky. In a previous column I mentioned the split among the senate Democrats and suggested that it would be difficult to replace Senator Robinson because of the qualities he had in holding the various factions together in the senate. It was not a forecast; it was a statement of fact.

SAMMY JAY TOO EXCITED TO TALK STRAIGHT

SAMMY JAY was excited. Everyone who heard him knew that, and everybody who was anywhere near heard him. They would have had to be stone deaf not to have. Sammy is just like some people—when he gets just a little excited he begins to talk in a loud voice. The more excited he gets the louder he talks. By and by, when he gets very much excited, he screams. That is what he was doing this beautiful spring morning, screaming as no one ever had heard him scream before. Indeed, he was so excited that his tongue couldn't go fast enough and tripped over his words and mixed things up so that no one could make out what he was trying to say.

"What's Got Into You, Sammy Jay?" Demanded Peter.

He came flying out of the Green Forest, flying as fast as he could make his wings go, and screaming at the top of his lungs. He saw Jimmy Skunk coming down the Lone Little Path and flew to meet him.

"He's a stranger and he's black!" screamed Sammy.

"Who's a stranger and who's black?" asked Jimmy.

"And he's got great, big claws in his mouth!" continued Sammy.

Jimmy Skunk stopped short and stared very hard at Sammy Jay.

"Say that again," said he.

But just then Sammy caught sight of Peter Rabbit down by his dear Old Briar Patch. "Oh, I must tell Peter!" he screamed. "Peter! Peter Rabbit! He's there! He's bigger than Farmer Brown's boy and he walks!" And all the time he was screaming this long before he was anywhere near the Old Briar Patch.

Jimmy Skunk was still staring after him and scratching his head in a puzzled kind of way, when along came Unc' Billy Possum.

With Equal Weight

NOT only Atlas bore the earth Upon his shoulders. Also we Have some small world of some small worth

For our responsibility. Not burdened only are the great, For others have them, each and all;

Yes, problems press with equal weight Upon the mighty and the small.

Our own small world our own small way

Each on his aching shoulder bears.

They little understand it, they Concerned alone with large affairs.

Some little duty takes our time, Some little worry takes our sleep, Some little slope we have to climb, Some little family to keep.

I have my world, and you have yours,

The little often larger than. Some other at his ease endures, And quite forgets the little man.

The little burden may be great, The great be little, after all.

At least they bear with equal weight Upon the mighty and the small.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

POSITION OF RIGHT ARM

KEEP your eye on the golfer who is overanxious to kill the ball and you no doubt will see him flap the right arm around so that at the top of the stroke it is almost straight out from the trunk of the body. From such a position it is very easy to make the mistake of coming out from the ball from the outside in, i.e., cutting across the ball and adding a slice. Furthermore such an extreme movement adds an unnecessary tension to this arm which it could very well do without. The proper method is to keep the right arm comfortably close to the right side. Tommy Armour for example keeps his right elbow tucked in close but possesses freedom of action nevertheless. Armour's is more or less of an extreme position; most of the players allow the right arm a trifle more freedom after the manner of Bobby Jones above. On the longer shots the Atlanta wizard's elbow is raised moderately and on the first stages of the downstroke, drops abruptly nearer the side. The cock of the wrists is in no manner disturbed by this motion and their power is saved to be utilized later on. The abrupt dropping of the right arm insures a swinging path from the inside, close to the body and brings the clubhead onto the ball straight along the line of flight.

FIRST-AID TO AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

PROTECTION AGAINST TERMITES

I AM hearing more and more of damage to houses by termites, and from practically all sections of the country. Termites are now known to be the real cause of a destruction of wood that was formerly blamed on dry rot. It is a matter of fact that nature provides termites for the reduction of dead wood to mold. They are part of the scheme of things. They are pests only when they attack wood that mankind wants to preserve. We cannot hope to exterminate termites. Our protection against them is to build our houses in such a way that they cannot be invaded.

Termite nests are always in the ground. In attacking a house, they do not set up nests in the woodwork, but travel back and forth between the wood and the home nest. Considering the damage that they can do, it seems only rational to build a house in such a way and of such materials that an attack will not be possible.

Foundations should be poured concrete, reinforced with steel bars to prevent cracking. In modern house designs, the first floor is on a level with the ground—or nearly so. This brings the floor beams within easy reach of termites. These beams should therefore be of steel instead of wood. Sills, studs, sheathing and other wood parts are also exposed. For protection, these wood parts should be impregnated with any one of several chemicals that will make them termite-proof. Treated wood can be had through any lumber yard. The price will be somewhat increased, but considering the damage that is avoided, the extra cost can be regarded as insurance, and is certainly a small price to pay.

Termites are of three classes or castes. The largest caste is made up of the "workers," which do the damage. A second class, is known as "soldiers," protect the workers against the attacks of ants and other enemies. Both of these castes are white; they are blind and never come to the surface. The third class is made up of winged black "reproductives." Once a year in the spring, occasionally also in the fall, these appear in a great swarm; they flutter about for a brief time, drop their wings, and disappear. A swarm of these insects is a danger signal that no home owner should disregard. He should at once find out whether his house has been attacked. There will be no outward sign on the woodwork; the destruction will all be within and can be learned only by drilling small holes, by pounding, or in some other way that will indicate hollowing of the timber. He may find slender tunnels of clay over the surface of masonry, these being the paths by which the termites circulate from the nest in the group. Information on how to proceed can be had from a pamphlet issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. The departments of agriculture of many states also have information.

BAXTER'S
BROTHER

By P. M. GALLAGHER
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

"I KNEW you were Baxter's brother the moment I saw you!" Leticia said, conscious of a suddenly rapid heart.

They were as alike as twins, of such high stature, so bronzed and blond.

Baxter had said, "Marshall is as indigenous to the West as cactus and ten-gallon hats . . . a typical hero out of one of those 'hair-pants and honeysuckle' yarns! God forbid that I ever stoop to write one!"

But Marshall wasn't rustic! He was hard and masculine and disturbingly suave and when he had risen to his feet as she had entered the drawing room, his heels clicking, his whole attitude one of mute admiration, she had experienced a brief traitorous moment of being glad that Baxter had had a mean headache and that Marshall was escorting her to the Italian ambassador's reception.

As Marshall helped Leticia into her wine-velvet evening wrap, their glances meeting and holding in the slick reflection of the brass encrusted mirror, she lowered her black curls that he might not see the excited sparkle in her gray eyes. It wasn't exactly clever to have Baxter's brother, whom she had never before met, think that his future sister-in-law was an utter fool . . . which, indeed, she was beginning to suspect of herself.

In Baxter's limousine, Marshall stretched his long legs out before him and sighed wearily.

Leticia's lashes winked quickly. "I hope Baxter hasn't forced you to do something you'll mind . . . dreadfully!"

He turned and the shadow-lit eyes were melancholy.

"Baxter is the social one in this family. I . . . gosh! . . . I hate it. I've lived on the ranch in Montana . . . so much . . . alone . . . I feel as silly in a dress suit as I would in tights. If you and I could chuck this reception . . . park down on the Speedway and talk . . . why! . . . I'd like that!"

Leticia's fingers tightened on her jewel-studded purse. It hadn't occurred to her, recently, that there was anything in life but receptions and going . . . going! Before she had met Baxter . . . two years ago! . . . she had spent many evenings at home, listening to the radio, reading the famous Baxter Vandergriff's best sellers, being comfy and snug, never knowing the utter fatigue that she experienced so often lately. She had been confident from the passages in Baxter's books that he was an unusual man, with beautiful ideals and romance and color, and when she had met him on a trip abroad she had fallen in love instantly; indeed, looking back, she was quite in love with him before she had even met him!

Suddenly the idea of a quiet evening on the Potomac's edge with no badinage in her ears, no basking in Baxter's reflected glory, no exuberant introductions of "Oh! my dears! Baxter Vandergriff's fiancée! Author of 'As the Tree Grows,' you know! Such a genius!" became very appealing.

Her eyes brightened. "Let's!" she said. "I'd . . . love it . . . too!"

Marshall lifted a quizzical eyebrow.

"You mean . . . you'd actually enjoy an evening . . . like that!"

He was studying her face, the unbelievable eagerness of it.

"Gosh!" he said, with the alacrity of profound relief. "This . . . is . . . swell!"

The air smelt sweet of evergreen needles and early tulips and cherry trees in blossom as they gazed across the slick mirror of the Potomac to the impressive buildings of the Army War college. Leticia's arm was linked in Marshall's and because he looked so terribly like Baxter and because her heart was still pulsing a little crazily, she thought, "It's silly to feel like this but after all he is Baxter's brother and you're supposed to feel close . . ."

But in the next moment when Marshall turned, saying, "You're divine, Leticia! I didn't know that there were any beautiful girls left who enjoyed just doing . . . nothing . . . especially with me!"

She had wondered if she could ever lift her eyes from the magnetism of his gaze. It made her feel a little as she had, years ago, when going under ether.

He, too, felt the strange current that surged through her, for he reached for her hand and held it tight between his own.

He said, "Leticia!" A single word, but so full of meaning it seemed to come from his heart, his lips not at all.

Then she was in his arms and he was kissing her, not a brother's kiss for his future sister-in-law, but one that swept her close to his heart . . . one to which she responded, hungrily. Never had Baxter kissed her like that . . . made her feel like this!

At last she said, wistfully, inimitably, "Marshall . . . I don't know why . . . I wanted you to . . . kiss me."

"Nor can I explain why I love you, Leticia . . . knowing so little of you."

"But . . . Baxter!" she went on, moving from his embrace. "I care for him, you know. I do." She repeated as if to reassure herself.

"I understand," Marshall said. "I'm returning to Montana in the morning. I couldn't do this to Baxter even if . . . you cared for me . . . and were willing."

The mellow cadence of an orchestra penetrated the deep stillness and grew louder as a yacht cut a silvery path from the Corinthian club. It was close now, so close that Leticia could hear voices and distinguish the filmy dresses of the women limned against the lights and the black shadows of the men. She was thankful for a distraction at this strained moment and watched, with staid indifference, the vessel coming closer through the diaphanous mantle of night. But then . . . Then!

Leticia's face went suddenly white. She glanced swiftly at Marshall whose expression was artlessly unconcealed and surprised as her own.

"Leticia!" He spoke first. "I didn't know that Baxter was going on that yachting party. I swear it! I left him . . . with an ice-cap on his head. He may have improved and decided to . . ."

But Leticia was in control of herself, ignoring the invisible knife that pierced her heart.

"Please, Marshall! . . . don't try to . . . patch things up. That's Jeneva Kartopka . . . the Hungarian dancer . . . at the taffrail beside him. I had refused to believe . . . rumors . . . about them. But seeing . . . is different . . . isn't it, Marshall?"

The silence was fraught with meaning.

The very swishing of the water against the sea-wall seemed hushed, strained. Marshall reached for her hand and held it close above his heart. "If I could only make it up to you," he said, after a cogent pause, " . . . in some way."

The brief contact of his fingers on her own sent Leticia's heart beating unreasonably. She tried to tell herself that it was because Marshall was so like Baxter. It just couldn't mean anything else: a girl didn't love one brother in the morning and the other in the evening.

"Please . . .!" she whispered, drawing her hand away. It was almost impossible to remember the deep hurt that the night had brought her when Marshall was so close.

"This hits . . . me . . . hard, Marshall. You see . . . I fell in love with Baxter through his novels first . . . even before I saw him. And when I met him and he was so handsome, and I knew how fine and sincere and real he was beneath his deceptively frivolous exterior because I had read him for years, why . . . I . . ."

And then, quite without realizing it, Marshall was crushing her in his arms and she was forgetting, beneath the fierceness of his kiss, that there ever had been anyone named Baxter Vandergriff in her life.

"Leticia! You're a lovely liar!" he began, offering no exegesis. "You don't love Baxter! You love me, darling! . . . Me, do you hear! Why! I . . . I wrote all of those books! I hate social life and Baxter loves it. I pay him a salary to go around keeping himself popular in my name. He's swell at that, Leticia . . . and he wouldn't be, at anything else, I'm afraid. A business arrangement . . . good for us both. It leaves me free to write my novels and to study and to live my own life on the ranch. And it makes him independent, economically. You'll love the ranch . . . and the West . . . Leticia!"

And Leticia, snuggling closer, knew that she would.

New Finish Keeps Metal

Immune to Oxidization

The century-old dismay of the housewife, no less than of the jeweler, has been the fact that silver, when placed in contact with air, becomes oxidized—in other words, it tarnishes.

The British Laboratory of Chemical Research, which was able to fabricate steel that would not rust and make it commercially profitable all over the world, has discovered that by treating silver with the little known metal rhodium it will remain indefinitely untarnished without any impairment of its beauty.

The process, which is very simple, was demonstrated a short time ago in London before representatives of local guilds. A piece of copper sheet was thoroughly cleansed in a bath of alkalis, washed in water, and then dipped for a few minutes in an electro-plating solution of rhodium. That was all.

Almost the entire world output of rhodium is from Canada, and until recently it was extremely limited.

The opening of the precious metal refinery at Acton, a Middlesex suburb of London, has made sufficient supplies available to justify research into its commercial application. It is one of the six platinum metals, and its value is twice as much as that of platinum or fine gold. No acid attacks it. In color and form it is brilliantly white and hard.

The "rhodanizing" process can be applied to other metals as well as silver, but it is particularly valuable to the silver trade in view of its decline since the great war. The possibilities in its use are considerable, for silver that has been treated will only require periodical washing with soap and water, and the rhodium finish is unaffected by heat, and does not chip or crack.

Oilcloth for Shelves—Oilcloth, if white, can be used to line the shelves and walls of dark cupboards. It will lighten them considerably. If placed on the last step of a dark cellar staircase, it will make the descent easier.

For Lighter Potatoes—A small amount of milk added to the water in which potatoes are boiled will make them lighter and fluffier when mashed.

Removing Grease From Wallpaper—Grease may be removed from wallpaper by moistening absorbent cotton with carbon tetrachloride and pressing it against the spot. Do not rub it over the spot as that will remove the wallpaper too.

Length of Suez Canal

The actual length of the Suez canal is about 100 miles, a little more or a little less, depending upon the way in which it is measured. Reference books do not agree as to its exact length. The discrepancy lies in the fact that it may be measured from the southernmost end of Port Said harbor to the northeastern shore of Suez bay at Port Tewfik, or from the De Lesseps statue north of Port Said to the anchorage in the middle of Suez bay.

THE BLUE RIBBON PRODUCTS COMPANY

"The Beer of Quality"

The Blue Ribbon Products Company is located at 414 New in Joliet; Telephone 7431.

If you enjoy a glass of really fine beer you'll certainly appreciate Blue Ribbon Beer distributed by this Joliet concern.

From mash to bottle Blue Ribbon Beer has undergone the best known modern methods of brewing. It is brewed in a plant that is equipped with every modern device. It is made from the choicest malt and hops; it's step by step development from grain to bottled goodness is under the supervision of an old time expert brewmaster.

Blue Ribbon Beer is smooth, mellow and fully aged. It has full strength malt goodness, and is rich bodied and refreshing. There is no bitterness to Blue Ribbon because modern methods remove all "over hopping" taste without losing the desired hop flavor. There is hardly more that you could ask for in a beer.

"The Child's First School Is The Family," Says Noted Authority

By Laura Gray

"Come, Bobby, say 'How do you do' to Mrs. Kieth." Mrs. Morrow tried to lift her five-year-old from the floor where he was playing.

"Won't!" muttered her son with a resentful look at the visitor, at the same time "making himself limp and heavy."

"You must. Get up. Say 'Good morning!'"

"No! Won't!" stubbornly repeated the child.

A very unpleasant scene was now in progress, embarrassing to both women.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Kieth," apologized Mrs. Morrow. "I can't get Bobby to speak to visitors. How did you teach little Jean to be so friendly? When I was tailing up the hill yesterday, she ran out to me. 'I'll help you carry those parcels,' she said pleasantly—and she's three months younger than Bobby! I think some children are born with attractive manners and others are not."

A week or two later, Bobby entered kindergarten. When he had been attending for about three months, Mrs. Morrow received an invitation to attend the Mothers' Day exercises. Bobby met his mother at the door and greeted her with a beaming, "Good morning, Mother, would you like this seat near the front or that one by the window?"

"That one!" she answered trying not to betray her surprise.

"Like a program?" A little blue-eyed girl carrying a bundle of papers offered one.

"Thank you," nodded Bobby's mother. But her eyes were on her son as he escorted people to seats with smiling grace. Was this her son?—her sulky little boy?

When the exercises were over she hastened for a word with the kindergarten.

"Miss Planta, how did you do it?—get Bobby to be like that? He won't speak to visitors at home."

The teacher turned a smiling face and in a low, pleasant voice said, "Why I often give Bobby the job of welcoming visitors; he enjoys it so much. I try to make the children feel pleasure in the daily greeting each has with me. They do enjoy these little courtesies, don't they?"

Bobby's mother went home in deep thought. What the kindergarten had done for Bobby could have been done just as well, and better, at home.

The world lays its best at the feet of the man or woman possessing this priceless gift of charm, a quality that can be cultivated. Self-consciousness can often be lessened if the small boy or girl is allowed to prepare a gift for the person to be greeted. The child should be encouraged to pick a bunch of flowers for Teacher, or wrap up a pot of jelly for a neighbor.

The best means for helping a child to develop attractive manners, of course, is example; the manners of those nearest are readily adopted. The pleasant "Thank you" for Son's efforts to please, and praise for the simple tasks well done may influence him to form a life-long habit of expressing appreciation.

Daddy's return from the office can easily be made an event to talk about, look forward to and get really excited over. The greeting will be spontaneous.

The milkman, baker and postman should each have a pleasant "Good morning." Mother should encourage the little fellow who toddles by her side, receiving his introduction to society from her, to have a gracious word for all. But she should never demand this of him, or he is likely to become self-conscious or insincere. She should really lead him to think of the "other fellow" rather than of himself.

Let her talk of what the milkman must do; how early he must start his rounds, how many steps he must climb, how regular he must be. Then the child will be interested in the man.

If the weather is extremely warm or stormy or the streets are blocked with snow and ice, Bobby will be really concerned about the milkman. His greeting will be so selfless as to be full of appeal, and the milkman will respond pleasantly. This will bring a feeling of satisfaction which will urge Bobby on toward further friendliness.

THE MIDNIGHT RIDER WHO ROUSED A NATION! PAUL REVERE

Paul Revere was a gold-and-silver-smith, a trade which he learned in his father's shop. A fine copper engraver, he was the pioneer of copper manufacturing in America. An officer of the militia, Revere was a brave patriot and took part in the Boston Tea Party. He induced the Colonists to seize English stores and to capture Fort William and Mary—one of the first battles of the Revolutionary War.

Two Loves

By SCOTT RYALL
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

ALVAN McFEE pressed his fingers against his coat, rubbed them as if to remove the nervous, burning desire. He crossed the lighted doorway, returned, crossed again.

Most of the crowd would be in the gaming rooms bending over the green baize tables, faces tense under the white glare of hanging lamps. Now the croupier would clear the board, shove a stack of yellow chips to the winner.

The winner! McFee set his jaw in grim determination. The action made him seem more ruggedly handsome than ever. But the lighted doorway drew him as a magnet gathers metal. He was born to gamble.

Janet Marlowe had said as she lay back on the warm brown drapings of the lounge, a colorful pillow drawn under her armpit: "You're not a boy, any more, Al."

"It just seems to be in my blood, Jay," he had answered, cheerfully, helping himself to one of her cigarettes. "If you figure it from a business standpoint, I'm doing all right. I break even."

"Are you counting all your losses?" she had asked curiously. "Certainly. Why?"

She straightened and suddenly her smiling face became grave. "Al, you're gambling my love!"

"Oh, come, Jay," he had remonstrated, "you know it isn't as serious as that!"

Then she had laughed, had told him she joked and sent him on. But he had never seen her more earnest than at that moment.

It was this which had kept him from entering the casino. The burning desire for the tables kept him from leaving it altogether. At last he went up the steps.

"Good evening, Mr. McFee," said a voice at his side, followed by a tantalizing laugh, and he turned to find Janet Marlowe.

"Oh," there was a moment of awkward silence. "I hardly expected you after—" he hesitated.

"The lecture? I wanted to understand the attraction." She was looking at him intently.

"Will you sit aside for a while?" he asked uncomfortably, feeling instinctively that he didn't want her to play. It wouldn't do for Janet Marlowe to get the fever and those lines of despair. She wasn't like him, born to gamble. It wouldn't affect him. Wasn't all life a gamble anyway?

"Didn't you come to play?" she asked softly.

"Yes," he said bluntly. "May I watch?"

"Of course."

He looked at her face as they moved toward the players. She slipped her arm familiarly in the crook of his elbow, but her glance was veiled, full of hidden meaning.

Then they were at the table. He gave a bill for chips and leaned over following the leaping dice with practiced glance. He did not play immediately. Neither did he notice when she left but as he finally placed a bet he looked over the table and saw her on the far side, smiling inscrutably.

The dice leaped and leaped again. The croupier drew in the winnings, paid a man at the table's end. The man bet again and the familiar lines worn by former losers slipped across his face.

McFee let a play go by. Janet was still watching. Then he pushed a bet across.

"Five to win," he said hoarsely. "I'll gamble my love," said a laughing voice at the end of the table.

He whirled as if he had been struck. A dark-haired, gypsy-like girl was laughing up at her escort. "Even if you lose, darling," he was saying, "I win."

McFee's mind seemed whirling. He forgot the dice, did not watch them go into the cup. These young people did not have the mark of the gamblers. They would get it. Now the girl playfully claimed she would gamble her love. But what of the time when he gambled her love?

McFee looked across to the place Janet had occupied, but a stout woman with a vulgar gob of diamonds was there. He glanced over the room, saw Janet hurrying toward the door, a flash of a handkerchief hastily dabbing her eyes.

"Janet!" he called. People turned, but she hurried on.

"Five!" called the croupier. "Gentleman wins on five."

But Alvan McFee was already halfway to the door. He caught her as she hurried along the outer walk, silently tucked her arm beneath his.

"My darling," he said softly, "I have only one love now."

She hid her face, sobbing softly. "I was afraid—afraid you'd never know there were two."

English by birth, he called himself with the American cause, and was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and later a member of the Constitutional Convention.

During the Revolution, Morris became the chief financial manager of the Colonies. He used his personal credit and all his property to purchase large quantities of supplies for Washington's army, and founded two banks that loaned huge sums of money to the government. The dishonesty of his partner in a real estate deal ruined Morris. Unable to pay his debts, he was jailed for several months, and, despite his great services to his country, died a broken pauper.

20,000 Cars Of Grain Crop

Survey on the Rock Island Lines of the 1937 wheat movement, now passed the peak, reveals that this railroad to date has moved more than 20,000 cars from local stations to central grain markets, with indications that half that number of additional cars will be moved before the active season is closed. In some respects, the rapid handling of this year's wheat crop on this railroad, has set a record. Much of the wheat moved in extra trains.

Beginning last March, the Rock

Island started assembling box cars at nearly 300 wheat-loading stations on its lines, until a total of about 6,000 cars had been made available by the time local elevators were ready for shipment. Quick return of the empties made it possible to continue a steady stream into terminals.

Consequently, according to J. D. Farrington, Chief Operating Officer of the railroad, no shortage of cars has occurred, nor is any shortage anticipated. Incidentally, it is pointed out, the Rock Island rebuilt and placed into service in the grain sections, more than 2,000 box cars. Also, this railroad has rebuilt a large number of stock and coal cars in preparation for Fall traffic. Three hundred and fifty modern automobile cars recently were purchased.

Play Polo

Semi-Finals

The past week saw the playing of the semi-finals of the tournament sponsored by the Eighth District of the American Legion. The Olympia Fields Senior, winner of the preliminary match at Olympia Fields, journeyed to Detroit to play in a semi-final against the four of the Grosse Pointe Country Club, winner of the Detroit division. The game, postponed from July 25th, on account of rain, was played at Cook Field, Grosse Pointe, Detroit, on Wednesday, July 28.

In a hard and fast game featured by reckless riding and frequent scoring the Olympia Fields team won 20 to 10. Lt. Hobart D. "Cowboy" Reed, playing no 4 for Olympia Fields had a spill when his mount slipped and fell on a sharp turn.

In the Chicago Division Oakbrook will be represented in the finals by a strong team led by the veteran Texan "Gillie" Gillmore who rates a handicap of six goals, the highest of any player in either the Detroit or Chicago areas. Gillmore has not announced his lineup but it is probable that it will be selected from among Steve Hammond, Capt. Roy Keenhe, Steve Healy, and other strong players at the Oakbrook club.

The game will begin at 4 p. m. August 8 at the Bell Ranch field at the intersection of 203rd street and Illinois route 49. The game will be preceded by exhibition drills by drum and bugle corps which will start at 3 p. m. These will be followed by a parade of the ponies and presentation of the teams. Cups will be presented to the winning team.

NEW YORK FAIR 1939 IN CONSTRUCTION STAGE

NEW YORK (Special).—The $900,000 Administration Building of the New York Fair is under roof some 22 months in advance of the exposition's opening date and in August will be ready for occupancy by the hundreds of specialist workers who conduct the business of the "industry" and advance development of the $125,000,000 world event. The corner stone of this first major Fair building was laid on April 27 in the presence of many notable figures in national life.

The Administration building, shown as progressing in actuality and by an artist's sketch, is the Fair Corporation's workshop and showroom. While the 1216½-acre site of the exposition is today the scene of much and varied activity, with several exhibit pavilions going up this year, the majority of the 300 buildings necessary to housing the exposition are scheduled for construction in 1938. By midsummer of next year, it is estimated, fully 15,000 persons will be employed in building activities where only a year ago there was nothing but waste land.

This Week In Washington

Ralph E. Church
Illinois Representative in Congress

One of the most exciting and amazing chapters in American political history has been completed. On Thursday, July 22nd, by a vote of 70 to 20 the United States Senate recommitted the proposal to enlarge the Supreme Court back to the Judiciary Committee for an ignominious burial. It has now been decided that no President, however popular as a personality, should be permitted to change the character of the Supreme Court so as to conform it to his wishes.

No President ever received such an impressive victory at the polls. No President ever had a larger and more subservient majority in Congress. No President ever controlled such extensive political power. No President was ever clothed with such complete authority over our organized society.

But just within eight months after his sweeping re-election, regardless of his power and influence, a President of the United States has been crushingly defeated by a Senate in which his party has 76 out of the 96 seats. Even his closest friends deserted him on the issue and ignored the pleas for loyalty. It is an amazing development. What is the answer?

There will be those who will credit the defeat of the measure to some one or other of the events that took place subsequent to its introduction into Congress, particularly during the last few weeks. The answer will not be found in any one of them. It was not the death of Senator Robinson, nor the "Dear Alben" letter from the President to Senator Barkley which caused the result. Nor was it the letter of Governor Lehmann of New York to Senator Wagner of that State.

To be sure, all those events contributed something to the defeat of the Court plan. But none of them in itself is the answer to the refusal of the United States Senate to comply with the insistence of a powerful and popular President that the bill be enacted at this session.

The answer will be found in that which took place in the Senate Chamber when the motion to recommit the bill was being made by Senator M. M. Logan, Democrat, of Kentucky. Part of the motion comprised instructions to the Committee to report another bill within 10 days. Pursuant to a previous agreement, the new bill was not to alter the Supreme Court.

Senator Hiram Johnson, Republican, of California, immediately asked whether the motion meant that the Supreme Court part of the proposal would be dropped. When Senator Logan replied in the affirmative, the Californian exclaimed, "Glory be to God!" the packed galleries burst into applause.

There is the answer why the bill was crushingly defeated. The exclamation of Senator Johnson came from his heart. It is indicative of the sincerity of those who had been opposing the proposal. It is indicative of their earnestness in seeking to sustain the principle of an "independent judiciary" and their feeling of anxiety. Earnest men with deep-seated convictions cannot be shaken from their cause. There is no greater force, and that force the President could not overcome regardless of the power he possessed.

These earnest men had the people behind them. The applause in the Senate galleries was undoubtedly echoed throughout the nation. The people had made it known that they believe in the orderly processes of government and in the American system of "checks and balances." They had made it known that with all its faults, real or imagined, they have faith in an independent Supreme Court. The Senate responded to the people's wishes.

Thursday, July 22nd, is truly a memorable day. We have recorded on that page of our history for every future Executive to read: no President, however large his election majority, will be permitted to alter the pattern of the government without the explicit consent of the people themselves.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

WATER POEMS

An episode in an amateur photographer's picture Odyssey of the travels of water. Exposure f.22 at 1/25 second.

THE moods of water, tumbling, bubbling, gushing, spouting, dashing, splashing, trickling, rolling, rippling, dripping, glad, angry, smooth, rough, serene, peaceful, make adjectives for poets. For the amateur photographer with any poetry in his soul whatever, they make themes for beautiful pictures and the subject of a delightful picture hobby.

We know of one amateur photographer who used his camera to picture the grand circle water makes in its journey from land to sea to the clouds and back to the land again. This picture epic of water began with a photograph of a tiny woodland spring, then pictures of a rivulet, a brook, a river, a mightier river with its waterfalls and cataracts, the bay through which it flowed into the ocean, the ocean itself, a cloud and the sunbeam picture over the ocean, thus picturing water being caught up for its return journey, and finally rain.

This idea far from exhausts the possibilities of poetic water pictures, especially when human interest is added. The majestic sweep of water over Niagara Falls is a poem in itself but a honeymooning pair in the foreground adds romance. A fair swimmer in clear water on which sunshine is shimmering creates a poetic pattern of life and light. A pseudo-moonlight picture over a placid lake of a youth and a maid in a canoe (a shot into the setting sun with a small lens opening) gives a poetic mood to "the waters stilled at even." Foam at the prow of a careening yacht or its churning wake over the stern depicts the poetry of motion.

Verses may be illustrated. "Where the breaking waves dash high on a stern and rockbound coast" is a place for photographs of one of water's most inspiring moods, and then, from the hilltops "there is not in the wide world a valley so sweet, as that vale in whose bosom the bright waters meet."

Endless are your opportunities for making delightful photographs of water scenes. But there's a trick to successful water photography. It's largely a matter of shooting so that the pictured water has the right "feel" or texture.

For example, it's possible to shoot spray too fast, so that it has a hard, brittle look, thereby losing its essential sense of movement. On the other hand, rippling water should be shot fast enough so that the ripples are distinct, each with its own highlights.

Another point is lighting. Choose the angle that gives you the maximum "texture," the characteristic interplay of light and shade. No one can tell you exactly how to go about this; a little experimenting will tell you better than volumes of words. But keep this in mind. Any fair-sized body of water reflects a lot of light. Your exposures, therefore, can be faster or, preferably, your "stop" smaller than for a comparable summer landscape.

A Tragic Anniversary

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Recently the world noted, with a sort of shocked surprise, that the war in Spain had entered upon its second year.

During those tragic twelve months, terrible losses in life have been suffered.
During them, whatever freedom the people of Spain may have enjoyed has been grievously threatened.

For into the conflict have entered the rival influences and forces of the two great enemies of individual freedom—Communism and Dictatorship. And whichever of the two may win in the end, the people themselves will lose.

Both those political products of a distracted and frightened Europe are the enemies of that democracy which we of America revere. Both preach the subjection of the individual man and woman to a dominant state or dictator.
Both are repugnant to the basic principle on which our own nation was founded.

And whichever side wins faces a hollow victory. America can prove that.
So can those other nations where democracy stands secure, and, with it, government dedicated to freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion and freedom of opportunity.

While Europe endures the tragic conflict, America celebrates this summer the 150th anniversary of a Constitution which announced the principle that "We, the people," would control our government.

What that principle can mean is demonstrated in our established record of national achievement and individual well-being—a record which no Fascist or Communist state has even remotely approached.

JUST FANCY THAT!

MUCK-RAKING JOURNALISM!

IMAGINE it... the staid John Quincy Adams being interviewed as he bathed in the Potomac river—and with a woman as the inquiring reporter!

Anne Royal was her name, and she was America's first muck-raking journalist... the pioneer among shady newspaper writers who did her best to "dig up the dirt" about early governmental officials.

Here was an "Uncommon American," one of that fascinating species now discussed in a series of feature articles by a great modern writer—Elmo Scott Watson. Short, attention-compelling and revealing, these articles will hold your attention to the end. Don't miss

A Bond to the People

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

"The Government itself is under bond to the American people that in the exercise of its functions and powers it will deal with the body of our citizens in a manner scrupulously honest and fair and absolutely just."

Those are the words of former President Cleveland, the centennial of whose birth, on March 18, 1837, admirers celebrate this year.

By many thousands of Americans, regardless of party affiliations, the memory of their author is honored for the devotion to our national welfare shown in his official acts and utterances.

His words and admonitions are still quoted in reference to many of the problems which perplex us today. Here are just a few of them that America might do well to recall:

Public Service: "Office-holders are the agents of the people, not their masters."

The Constitution: "The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, not only impresses upon me the great responsibilities I now assume, but suggests obedience to Constitutional commands as the rule by which my official conduct must be guided. I shall preserve the Constitution by loyally protecting every grant of Federal power it contains, by defending all its restraints when attacked by impatience or restlessness and by enforcing its limitations and reservations in favor of the people."

Economy: "Extravagant appropriations of public money, with all its demoralizing consequences, should not be tolerated."

Self-Reliance: "Though the people should support the government, the government should not support the people."

Merit System: "If the people of this country ever submit to the banishment of its underlying principle from the operation of their government, they will abandon the surest guarantee of the safety and success of American institutions."

Home Rule: "Devotion to the public good will lead us to strongly resist all impatience of constitutional limitation of Federal power and to persistently check the increasing tendency to extend the scope of federal legislation into the domain of State and local jurisdiction upon the plea of subserving the public welfare."

Not only on a centenary date, but throughout our national history, America can, with profit, both honor and follow such advice.

Tell your son about ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Tell Him What You've Found to Be True

● Tell him of the value, educationally, he will derive from reading this noted feature writer's historical articles as they appear regularly in this paper. He will probably say: "Sure, I like history, Pop, but..." But too often it's ponderous and drained of the vitality that makes history the stirring story that it is. Then reveal to him the skill with which this man makes dramatic phases of his country's history read like lively fiction.

● Show him that Mr. Watson's articles sometimes digress to other fields of American interest—to popular science, sports, the fine arts, industry, literature—to developments that will MAKE history... but read like romance.

You can feel secure in this guidance of your child's reading because Elmo Scott Watson's articles always are authoritative and are based upon the most painstaking research. In addition to writing these special articles, Mr. Watson serves as an instructor in feature writing at Medill School of Journalism, Northwestern University, and is co-author of a new book on the subject that has been adopted as a textbook by leading journalism schools throughout the nation.

Dedicate Woman's Club

Third Congressional District, Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

"The baby of the Third District, Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, after three months of existence, on Sunday, July 18th, formally dedicated its own club house, Columbus Manor Woman's Club, organized April 21st, has grown too large to meet in the homes of its members and found it necessary to secure a regular meeting place. To provide the club house Mrs. A. C. Adams, 9520 So. Moody avenue, Oak Lawn, Illinois, donated her two car garage, which gave adequate room but required flooring, finishing and decorating. This work was done by neighbors, friends and club members, which entailed a great deal of work and was finished the night preceding the dedication. For piano accompaniments neighbors assisted in moving the piano from the home of Mrs. Adams to the newly completed quarters.

At the dedication the president Mrs. A. C. Rice, 9805 Ridgeland avenue, Oak Lawn, Illinois, presided. Mrs. Arthur H. Swett, 10560 Longwood drive, district president, was the principal speaker; Miss Emma and Clarence Weber, gave several selections on guitars. Refreshments were provided by members of the club and interested merchants of the community. The program chairman and officers of the club are diligently working arranging their program and compiling their year book for the ensuing year. Meetings are scheduled for the first and third Wednesday of each month.

Women of Columbus Manor, which is a community of extensive area consisting primarily of small homes and people of modest income, for some years felt the need of a Woman's organization. Through her community welfare work and a civic interest in her neighborhood Mrs. Adams started the nucleus by calling some of her neighbors to her home last April, at which time through the existing enthusiasm the club was immediately organized. Retail Cuts

Pork is a universal favorite. It appears more frequently on the American table than any other meat dish, but there are a good many attractive pork cuts which are passed over by the average homemaker, because she is not acquainted with the possibilities they offer for new and attractive main dishes. The pork chart shown above deserves a place in the household files because it shows at a glance the variety of pork cuts and how to cook them.
